THE RACING DUEL

"Gweetings, my anemic chums!" Elmer called out gayly one day, meeting Bugs and Porky on the street. "You'll have to walk faster than that if you expect to reach the great heights of my physical condition!"

"Are you still harping on that muscle-building course you're taking?" Porky muttered gloomily.

Elmer nodded. "I've shown great improvement already," he announced proudly. "I can even wun faster!"

Bugs chuckled. "That's a laugh," he hooted. "Old Fateso-Fuddsy thinking he can clip along at a pace!"

Elmer was highly indignant. "I can wun faster than you can," he sputtered. "I'm willing to wace you any time you say!"

"Ha!" Bugs goaded, "the poor guy's mind's already muscle-bound! You know no one can run faster than old Bugs!"

"Well, you've certainly had enough practice, Bugs," Porky commented. "Going in the opposite direction, that is."

"Let's not get witty!" Bugs snapped. "Name your date, Elmer. I'll race you till the cows come home!"

They set Friday morning in the woods in back of Bugs's house as the time and place for the great race.

"Old Fuddsy does look a little faster on his feet, at that!" Bugs considered, as Elmer trotted down the street.

But if Bugs was worried, it had all faded the following day. He raced over to Porky's waving a letter excitedly.

"What is it?" Porky asked curiously.

Bugs's eyes twinkled. "Cousin Bosco's going to be in town next Friday, and he looks enough like me to be a twin!"

"I don't get you," Porky protested, "what's Bosco got to do with the race?"

"Why, I'll hide him behind the bush at the goal line," Bugs explained, mischievously. "then no matter how fast Elmer runs, he'll never be able to win." He sat back and gloated. "It'll drive him crazy!"

"I think that's awful," Porky sputtered.

"For pete's sake," Bugs protested, "it's just a joke! Besides, anything's fair when it comes to deflating that old windbag!"

And when Friday finally arrived, Bosco was on schedule and safely concealed before Elmer made his appearance.

"I hope you know what you're doing," Porky whispered to Bugs as he set the two racers off.

Bugs immediately let Elmer get ahead of him, then dropped back. "Watch his face when he sees old Bugs is already there," he murmured, gleefully.

But to his amazement, Bosco did not appear. "I won!" Elmer shouted happily. "I can wun faster than any old wabbit any day!"

Just then Bosco staggered out from behind the bush. "I'm sorry," he apologized, "but I guess I fell asleep."

Bugs let out a low groan. "Oh no," he muttered, "this could only happen to me."

But it was Elmer who was really flabbergasted. With Bugs in front of him, and Bugs in back of him, poor Elmer didn't know which way to turn.

"Sorry I messed up your trick, Cousin Bugs," Bosco added, lamely.

Elmer stood riveted to the spot. "Cousin!" he sputtered, wheeling around, facing Bugs. "You wascally wabbit! Wun for your life!"

And the real race was on!
